Vision to be Organized

Hello,

This newsletter was created by the request of my Aunt Anna Belle that wants "Motivation for Organization." She and I were just talking a few days ago and she said, "Christie, I just don't have the Motivation for Organization." Now I have seen my Aunt's home and on the surface she looks organized but maybe it's those drawers, closets, closed off bedrooms, or even the hidden boxes from the past that are causing her to feel unmotivated to become organized.

Well, I am pretty sure that my Aunt is not the only person without the motivation for organization. Even for myself, I often lack the motivation desire to do something, so I can understand. So, how about you, are you motivated to organize? Do you say, if only I could get organized? If only I had the motivation? Does your lack of motivation for organization carry over into other projects too: motivation to exercise, motivation to read those books that are collecting dust, motivation to take classes, motivation to save money for a vacation, motivation for all your desires in life?

Please continue reading this newsletter for some great Motivation for Organization tips.

Thank you,

Motivation for Organization Tip for Scrapbooking:

1. Enjoyment of your pictures! Your pictures tell your story of your life and with those people in your life. What is more motivating than reliving those great memories of your family and friends at the special events that you all shared?

2. Sharing with others. I recently made up a scrapbook album, a photo book and a digital book for my mom from three very different sets of pictures/events. She loves them all. Great motivation for me is seeing other people enjoying my pictures that I can share with them.

3. There is a time and a place to be creative or not creative. Are you creative? Do you have the motivation to be creative? Are you NOT creative? Do you have no desire to find that motivation to be creative? Either way, whether or not if you are creative or not, scrapbooking or photo preserving, you need the motivation to put your photos together.

Where does your motivation END with your photos?

1. Do your photos stay forever on the memory card in the digital camera to never be looked at again?

2. Do you get your photos printed and that's it, just printed? They stay forever in those envelopes from the printer and never get looked at again?

3. Do you only upload your photos to share with only those online? Well, what about those people that aren't online, how do they get to view your photos?

4. Do you have countless number boxes of photos not being looked at all because they are a crazy mess? Motivation to sort through those boxes may never come.

Where does your scrapbook/photo motivation stop? Where do you want your scrapbook/photo motivation to start?

Need some motivation help with your photos? Please, don't hesitate to use that small bit motivation that you may have to contact me for a scrapbook/photo session. Together we will find the motivation for organization for your photos!

can't even find the top of the dining room table? Motivation for organization is like any other motivation that is needed to do something and to just get it done. Motivation to exercise: just do it. Motivation to read books: just do it. Motivation to take a class: just do it. Motivation to save money for a vacation: just do it. It's starting to sound like the Nike commercial. My point is, that if you think you lack the motivation to get organized, then you just need to do it. Organize a drawer today. Organize the dining room table tomorrow. Organize the office desk piles next week. Organize the garage this weekend. Organize the kids playroom over the summer while they are at camp. Find your SMALLEST block of time so that you can organize your smallest drawer or find your LARGEST block of time so that you can organize your garage. The motivation for organization is finding the time and blocking out that time to organize what you need to organize.

Now go organize something!

And if you need some help, please don't hesitate to use that small bit of organization motivation to contact me for an organizing session.
